

Introduction:

The Jack Brown Adolescent Treatment Center (JBC) is a thirty-six bed co-educational facility providing residential chemical dependency treatment for Native American adolescents. We serve clients from 13 to 18 years of age who are experiencing substance abuse problems.

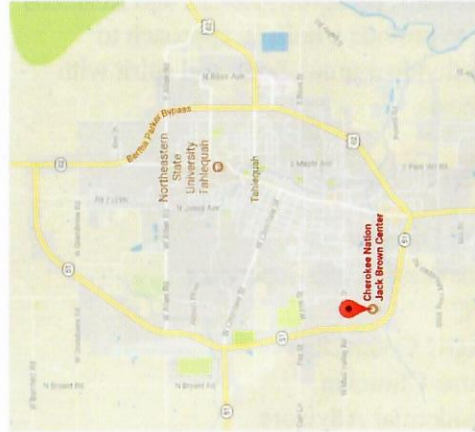

The Center addresses dual diagnosis, in addition to personal and/or family problems that may be referred to as mental health issues. Such issues often accompany a chemical abuse or dependency problem.

The length of stay for completion is up to 120 days. The Center provides a self-contained program of chemical dependency education and counseling, academic, recreational, psychological and cultural treatment approaches and components.

The Jack Brown Adolescent Treatment Center is funded by the Indian Health Service (IHS) and is operated by the Cherokee Nation Health Service Group.

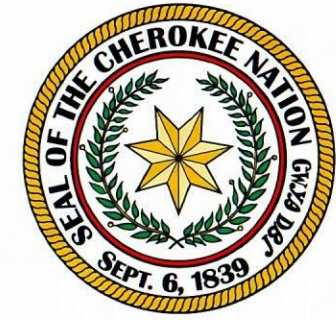

The Jack Brown Adolescent Treatment Center is accredited by the Commission Accreditation of Rehab Facilities (CARF) and certification through the Oklahoma Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services (ODMHSAS).
